

The American Farmer
By: Carter Buxbaum

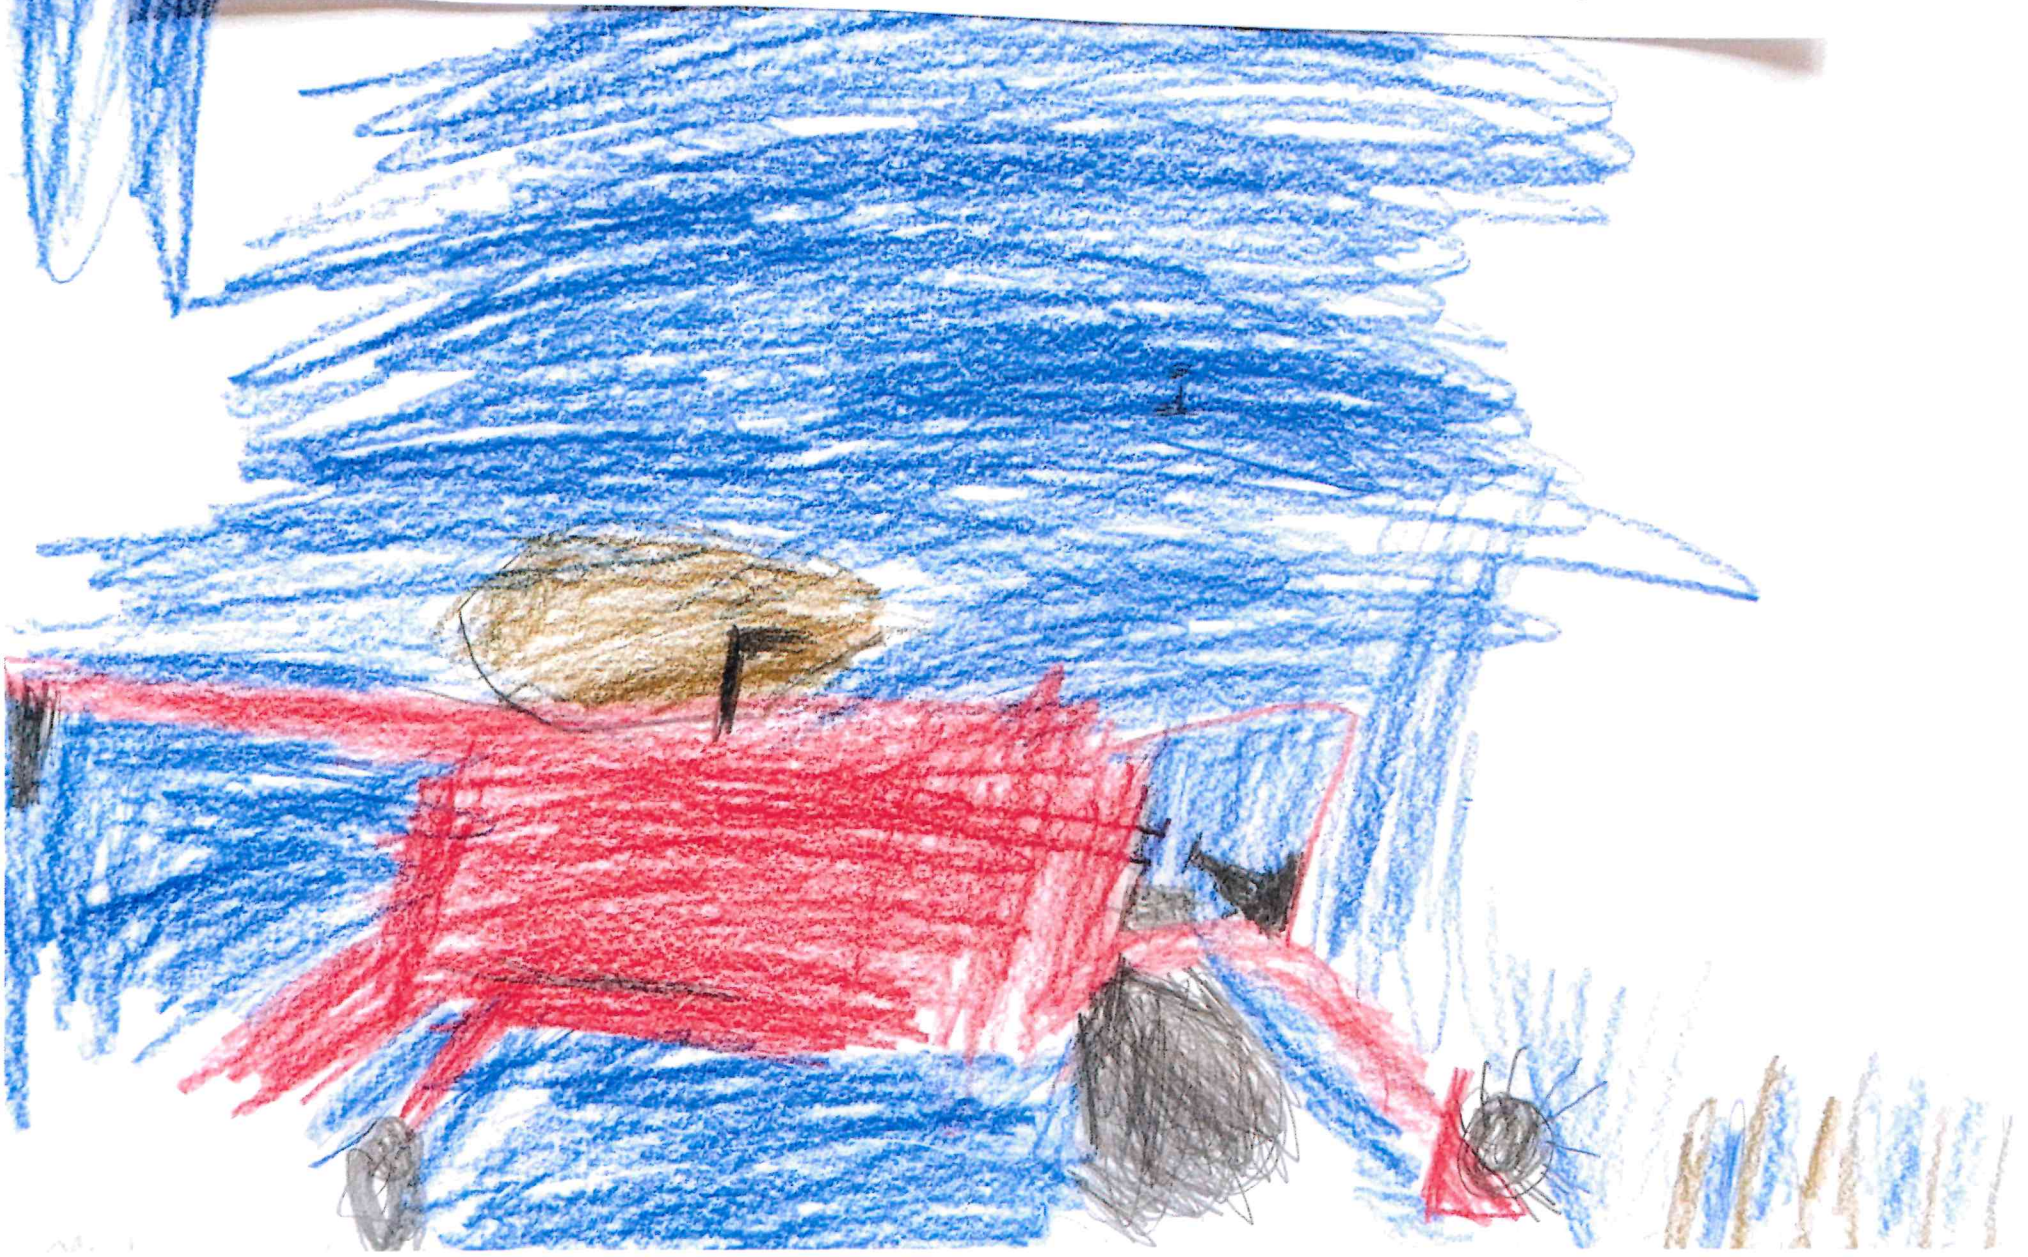

In the springtime, the American farmer is busy. It is planting season! He fixes his tractor, swather, and baler. He plants his crops and gets ready for the growing season. The cows are having their baby calves.

Summer time is haying season. The American farmer uses his swather to cut down the grass. After the grass hay is mowed, he uses his hay rake. He uses his baler to make the dry grass in to bales. The American farmer is thankful for rain that helps his other crops grow and gives his cows green grass to eat.

In the fall, the American farmer gets out his big combine. He cuts the wheat. He helps his neighbors harvest their crops. The American farmer gets his cows and barn ready for winter.

In the winter, the American farmer feeds the cows with the tractor. He uses his Gator to feed the heifers in the barn. The rest of the equipment is resting and waiting for springs work to begin again.

The American farmer is me! I love farming!
