MESSAGE FROM OUR PRESIDENT & GENERAL MANAGER

Changing Planet

I've spent most of my life in the American West and, while I've been privileged to see the sun rise from many eastern shores, for me there is nothing as beautiful as a blazing sunset at the end of the day. But this is also a harsh region known for dramatic and abrupt changes and where being able to quickly adapt is the name of the game. A calm sunny morning can suddenly turn into a stormy afternoon, and a dry arroyo can quickly become a deadly torrent of raging water.

“Our efforts to tame this rugged region force us to grapple with the reality that we need to live in harmony with our environment.”

Within our lifetimes, cities like Las Vegas, Phoenix, Los Angeles and many others have gone from desert outposts to bustling metropolitan centers. Our efforts to tame this rugged region force us to grapple with the reality that we need to live in harmony with our environment. Treating it like an adversary results in catastrophes like the St. Francis Dam collapse or the ongoing shortages we're witnessing right here in the Colorado River basin.

This Earth Month, join Vegas PBS as we look critically at the state of our planet. Leading scientists and ecologists will share their research and demonstrate how innovations in civil engineering can help us keep life on Earth, even in its most precarious regions, sustainable.

Think Wednesdays in April feature The Future of Nature at 10 p.m., where a growing army of inspiring people are leading a movement to help nature draw down carbon. On Changing Planet: River Restoration, see how two very different water channels, a rural river in California and the urban Seine in Paris, both offer insight into how we can save these precious waterways. In Upstream, Downriver: Uniting for Water Justice the powerful stories of community activists fighting for water justice and equity are interwoven with historical context about the Clean Water Act.

There are those who say that building cities in a desert is a doomed effort. But during my time at Vegas PBS, I know very well that this is a community that perseveres, and doesn't bow down easily to adversity. Thank you for your continued trust and ongoing support in Vegas PBS.

All the best,
Mare Mazur
